

COSC 3370 Software Engineering

Kevin White

4/21/2023

- Requirements are the most important artifact of software development.
 - Requirements are the most important artifact of software development because they allow for traceability throughout the development of the software and help provide a common ground between developers and the customer. If requirements are not correct than this can lead to expensive changes both in time and money. However, with correct requirements you can more efficiently make the product needed.